Due to thawing permafrost in combination with river currents and coastal storms, shoreline erosion at Newtok is advancing at 70 to 90 feet per year. The existing village site has already lost the sewage and solid waste disposal sites, barge landing, and boat dock. Work has begun on a new townsite known as Mertarvik, located in a more resilient location 9 miles upriver. The Native Village of Newtok is racing the advancing shoreline to obtain sufficient funds and build critical infrastructure at Mertarvik before the school and airstrip in Newtok are condemned.
